Commentary

The London local elections in 2002 marked the selection of the first directly-elected mayors in the London boroughs. Two boroughs, Lewisham and Newham, ushered in this new era following referendums held in the previous October and January respectively. The London Borough of Hackney chose election day, 2 May, to hold its referendum on a directly-elected mayor, and has since become the third London borough to adopt the new system.

The 2002 elections also saw a continued decline in participation by the electors. The Tories regained some of the ground they had lost since the early 1980s, the Liberal Democrats held their position, losing some and winning some, and the Labour Party had its worst showing for twenty years whilst retaining its lead in both seats and councils.

The results were rendered, at the same time, more interesting and more difficult to interpret, by the complete redrawing of the ward geographies in every borough. Among other effects, was the reduction in the number of councillors across the boroughs by 56 following consistent increases during the previous 38 years. We now have just two more than in 1964.

The borough elections

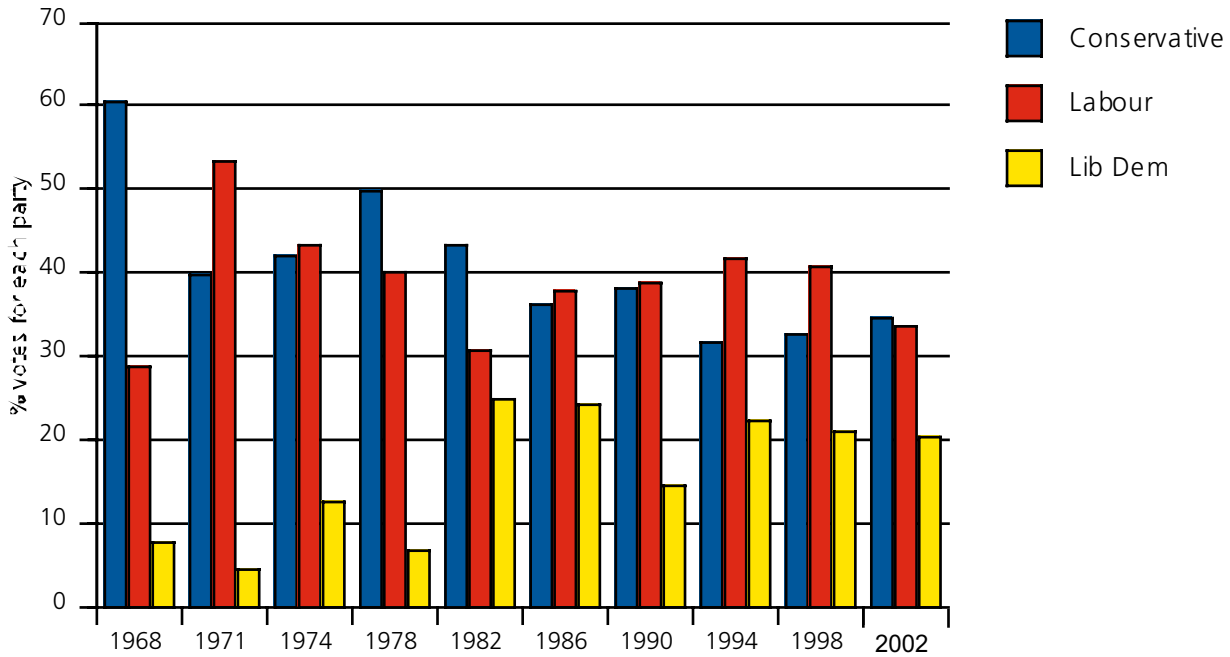

Table 1 illustrates the changes over the last three London borough general elections. Because of the decrease in the number of seats in London, the figures for councillors are shown as a rate per 2,000 seats, thus bringing the three elections onto the same basis. The actual numbers of seats won at these, and earlier, elections can be found in the Summary of election facts and figures on page xi.

Labour was the clear loser in 2002. The party saw its share of the vote drop by over six percentage points since 1998 and it lost the prestigious position of holding at least half the London seats (a position which Labour have enjoyed following six of the eleven tournaments since 1964). Labour now trail the Conservatives in terms of the popular vote but despite this have held on to a lead of over 200 seats. Nonetheless there has been a partial revival in Tory fortunes after they were expected to make greater advances in 1998. Labour now control 15 councils outright, run Harrow with a minority administration and Waltham Forest with the help of the Liberal Democrats, and the Conservatives run eight with an overall majority, Havering and Hillingdon with minority administrations and Lambeth jointly with the Liberal Democrats.

The Liberal Democrats made small gains in seats over 1998 but did not recoup the (admittedly small) losses of four years earlier. Figure 1 (overleaf) confirms that the party (including the Liberal and Social Democrat Alliance during the 80s) has retained between 20 and 25 per cent of the vote in all but one of the last six elections but has failed to break through to the point at which London is split equally three ways. In 1986 the Liberal Democrats first took control of a London borough in the modern era. Since then they have controlled seven different authorities (some with minority administrations) but, with the loss of Richmond in 2002, only Sutton has been retained in all five contests. Currently, they hold three authorities outright, form the minority administration in Southwark and take part in joint arrangements in two more boroughs (Lambeth and Waltham Forest as noted above). A particular problem for the party in the 2002 elections was the High Court ruling that 60 of the 63 nomination papers the Liberal Democrats submitted in Brent should be declared invalid. This arose because the description of the party given on the nomination paper failed to match the name given on the political party registration certificate (under the Political Parties, Elections and Referendum Act 2000). Their showing in Harrow Weald, the only ward in which their nomination was accepted (and one which the boundary changes had left almost untouched), suggested that with a full card they might have expected to have polled a similar share of the vote as in 1998 when they returned nine councillors in all.

Figure 2 illustrates the changes in boroughs controlled by the major parties since the first London borough elections in 1964. The Conservatives' partial recovery in 2002 is confirmed and Londoners continue to be comfortable with no overall control – six boroughs fall into this category, two fewer than at the previous two elections. The changes from the 1998 results are documented in Table 2. In 19 boroughs the same political party retained power with the Conservatives enjoying a net gain of four, and the Liberal Democrats a net gain of one. With five losses, Labour clearly fared the worst, but their disappointment would have been offset by gaining Bexley from the Tories and Hackney from no overall control.

The smaller parties and single issue candidates continue to do poorly, even if their performance has improved since 1998. Residents retained their 25 seats – principally in their stronghold of Havering – although they no longer have their long-held presence on Harrow Council. The Greens lost their seats in Hackney and gained but a single consolation in Lewisham – this despite doubling their number of candidates to cover almost 30 per cent of available seats. Altogether the minor players gained 33 seats compared to 28 in 1998.

Concern continues over the increasingly reducing levels of turnout at local elections. Figure 3 shows the turnout at each of the last ten London borough general elections. For the first time the percentage poll has dipped below 33 – less than one in three electors across the whole of London are exercising their democratic rights at these local elections. The experiments detailed later in this commentary explored, among other purposes, the possibilities of improving turnout using electronic voting, postal ballot only, and variations in polling station opening times. Whilst it was felt that some of the experiments forestalled greater falls in turnout in the trial areas, only that in Havering was thought to have had a positive effect.

Directly elected mayors

The Local Government Act, 2000, changed the way local authorities in England and Wales are run. Most authorities will now operate under one of three patterns of ‘executive arrangement’: a directly elected mayor and cabinet, a directly elected mayor and council manager, or a leader (chosen from the elected councillors in the traditional way) and cabinet. Local authorities were to consult on which pattern their electorate wanted, and, if the decision included an elected mayor, a binding referendum should be held.

Six boroughs have held referenda: Ealing, Hackney, Harrow, Lewisham, Newham and Southwark. Four chose to put the option for a directly elected mayor and cabinet to their electorate, Ealing carried out a referendum following a petition from their electors, and Southwark was directed by the Secretary of State to conduct a referendum. Table 4 shows that only in Hackney did the referendum achieve even the very poor levels of turnout found in the borough general elections, and in that case it was held on the same day, 2 May 2002. But even in Hackney, the huge number of invalid ballot papers, 5,656 or 13.5 per cent of those voting, brought the successful participation level to well below that of the council elections.

Three of the referenda, in Hackney, Lewisham and Newham, resulted in ‘yes’ votes and all three boroughs have now held their mayoral elections, Lewisham and Newham on 2 May 2002 and Hackney on 17 October 2002. All three polls attracted participation from only a quarter of the electorate and all three returned the respective Labour Party candidate, mirroring the boroughs’ administrations. In Newham the successful candidate achieved over 50 per cent of the vote on the first count, and in Lewisham and Hackney the second preference votes were required for a result. Tables 5 and 6 overleaf summarise the results and voting statistics.

Votes were cast in Newham polling stations using electronic touch screens. There were no rejected ballot papers as only valid votes were accepted in the counting and verification process. Postal votes were also entered electronically, by staff with agents and candidates present. The number of these rejected ballot papers were not recorded. There were 3,326 electors who were registered at polling stations but did not vote in the election for the Mayor. If these were included in the Mayoral poll, the percentage would have been 27.6. The election for Hackney’s Mayor was by postal ballot. There were 661 ballot papers rejected because they were received without a declaration of identity. Generally, such papers are not included in the count but if they were, the percentage poll would rise to 26.3.

* 3,326 electors registered at polling stations but did not vote in the Mayoral election. If these were included in the Mayoral poll, the percentage poll would be 27.6.

† There were 661 ballot papers rejected because they were received without a declaration of identity, and if these were included in the poll the percentage would be 26.3.

Local electoral pilot schemes

Under the Representation of the People Act, 2000, local authorities were invited to submit proposals to the Secretary of State to carry out pilot schemes on electoral reform. Pilots were selected by the Department for Transport Local Government and the Regions (now the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister) in consultation with the Electoral Commission which was responsible for the evaluation. Seven London boroughs were selected to conduct schemes during the May 2002 elections. These schemes are listed below with summaries of the Electoral Commission's findings.

Camden - Early voting on the Saturday and Sunday before the election at one of five polling stations; early voters could vote at any of the stations and were checked off electronically.

The locations chosen were in busy areas in contrast to an earlier experiment carried out in May 2000. The electronic checking was considered to have been successful but voting demand was too low to seriously test the system. The Commission concluded that there was no evidence to suggest that early voting had improved turnout. The number of electors choosing this method was slightly fewer than in 2000 despite there being only one polling station used in the earlier pilot. The evidence also suggests that most of those voting early would have voted in any case.

Greenwich - Postal voting only in two wards (Eltham West and Woolwich Common) subject to a simplified declaration of identity and an option to deliver the postal ballot to a polling station.

The Electoral Commission found no evidence that the scheme encouraged people to vote who would not otherwise have done so. However, the simplified system of declaration made the process easier for both the elector and those opening and checking the ballot papers, reducing the incidence of rejected papers. There was also a problem with late return of ballot papers – 5.2 per cent of the total returned in the two wards compared to 2.7 per cent of the postal vote in the remaining wards in Greenwich – resulting in these papers being excluded from the count.

Hackney - Postal ballot only; ballot paper and declaration of identity bar-coded to allow electronic verification; electronic counting; ballot papers could also be returned to five collection points on 1 and 2 May.

The pilot was seen to facilitate voting and the count. Although turnout fell, experience in similar surrounding areas suggested that without the experiment the drop might have been larger still, particularly against the background of historically low take-up of postal voting in the borough. A large proportion of the total ballot papers returned were personally delivered with 2,000 (5 per cent of the total) in the final two hours before closure.

Havering - Postal ballot only with an option to hand postal ballot papers in at six drop-in centres in the borough on election day.

Once again the postal ballot process was seen to facilitate voting and the count. In contrast to Hackney, the scheme was judged to have been successful in encouraging more people to vote and Havering achieved the highest borough-turnout in the London elections. There were serious concerns expressed over the use of a single envelope to contain both the declaration of identity and the ballot paper.

Newham - Electronic voting at all polling stations using touch-screen units (all postal votes were entered by hand using touch-screen units); electronic counting used; early voting from 24 April at specific locations in the borough; mobile voting using touch-screens used at sheltered accommodation, hospitals and other similar places.

The Commission saw the scheme as successfully aiding voting and counting, and although turnout did not improve, it was felt that the figure would have fallen further without the experiment. Although they had little effect on overall turnout, the mobile polling stations were seen as a successful attempt to improve social inclusion (390 people voted in this way, most of whom would not have voted using traditional methods). Visually impaired people reported problems with the touch-screen technology although otherwise this aspect seemed to have been well-received.

Wandsworth - Polling time extended by two hours in all wards.

Turnout was down substantially compared with the 1998 borough general elections, but around 10.5 per cent of votes were cast during the extended polling hours. A significant minority of those voting during the extended hours indicated that they would not have voted during the standard hours.

City of Westminster - Polling time extended by two hours in all wards and electronic counting used at the central count.

The Commission regarded the electronic counting pilot as a success, but the extended polling time was not seen as improving turnout, although it was acknowledged that turnout might have been reduced still further without the extension. The extended hours were used by 7.4 per cent of voters.

GLA Constituency comparisons

This analysis has been developed from a similar exercise carried out by Colin Rallings and Michael Thrasher¹. It simulates the results which would have been obtained in a first-past-the-post contest in the GLA Constituencies using results from each set of all-London elections in the last ten years.

Four current parliamentary constituencies straddle the Greater London boundary. The use of the 2001 parliamentary general election figures ignores the small parts of Kingston and Surbiton, and Sutton and Cheam constituencies which lie outside the boundary, and similarly, Esher and Walton, and Epsom and Ewell constituencies have not been used despite their including small parts of Greater London. The results from St James' ward in the City of Westminster was used to estimate the results for the City of London for the estimates based on the borough general elections, since the City of London does not take part in the borough elections being constituted on a different basis.

Six of the 14 constituencies maintained a consistent political complexion throughout the ten years – four Labour, in the North Eastern and inner South Eastern sectors, and two Conservative, in the outer South East. In three constituencies (Barnet and Camden, Ealing and Hillingdon, and Havering and Redbridge), the results in the GLA elections in 2000 appear to be at variance with the general pattern of estimates based on the other elections – with the Conservatives holding the seat in each case. In Brent and Harrow and Enfield and Haringey Labour have recently been the major party displacing the Conservatives early into the ten year period. The remaining three constituencies show greater volatility with the South West Constituency giving the Liberal Democrats their only successes in the 1994 borough and 2001 parliamentary elections.

Overall, Labour would have won on four occasions to the Conservatives' three. The highest percentage vote to any party was the 49.5 per cent gained by the Labour in the 1997 parliamentary election.

The London Borough Councils

The London boroughs were constituted under the London Government Act, 1963 and the first elections to the new councils were held on 7 May 1964. Prior to 1976, councillors were elected at general elections held every three years but as a result of an order made under the Local Government Act, 1972, the term of office of members of London borough councils was increased to four years. Before 1978 each council included aldermen, to a maximum of one sixth of the councillors, elected by the councillors from among themselves or from persons qualified to be councillors. Under the Local Government Act, 1972, the office of alderman of a London borough council ceased to exist after the 1978 elections. The mayor of each borough is elected annually by each council from among the councillors, with the following exception: under the Local Government Act, 2000, a council proposing a directly elected mayor must carry out a referendum on its proposals, the result of which is binding on the local authority (see the commentary on directly elected mayors in London on page xv).

Following ward boundary changes which became effective on 2 May 2002, the total number of wards in London were reduced from 1,917 to 1,861. The number of new wards per borough varies from 16 in Hammersmith and Fulham, Islington and Kingston upon Thames to 24 in Croydon. The number of councillors per borough ranges from 46 in Hammersmith and Fulham to 70 in Croydon. Most London wards now return 3 members, but four boroughs include wards with fewer seats: Bromley with four two-seat and one single-seat ward, Croydon with two two-seat wards, Hammersmith and Fulham also with two two-seat wards and Hillingdon with one two-seat ward.

City of London

The Corporation of London is constituted differently to the London boroughs and is, therefore, not included in the current publication. It consists of common councilmen and aldermen in addition to the Lord Mayor. The aldermen are elected for life by the ward voters (who include business as well as resident voters).

Tables and Calculations

The main results and the share of the votes by party are combined to provide a single section for each London borough giving all the most important information. This appears between pages 1 and 176.

The general method for calculating share of the votes follows that used in 1994. For the purposes of calculating vote share, residents' associations, independent residents and tenants and residents have been combined into a single grouping which is given the abbreviation RES in the borough statistics.

All percentage vote figures include a correction to reduce the errors due both to parties or groups failing to nominate candidates for all seats in a ward, and to the differing numbers of seats in wards within and between boroughs. The correction chosen is the use of average votes per candidate for any given party or group. Percentages are based on the sum of average votes for a ward or borough, which is thus used as an estimate of the total number of valid votes cast in a single seat election. Percentages do not necessarily add to 100 due to rounding.

Candidates' Names

Candidates' principal names are shown as they appear on the nomination papers and other names by which they may be known locally have been excluded.

Acknowledgements

Once again we should like to thank the Returning

Officers of the London boroughs who supplied the basic information presented in this volume. Our thanks are also due to the many other members and officers of the London boroughs who were instrumental in improving the quality of our information, and especially to Ken Livingstone and Sir David Williams who provided valuable help and advice.

Maps

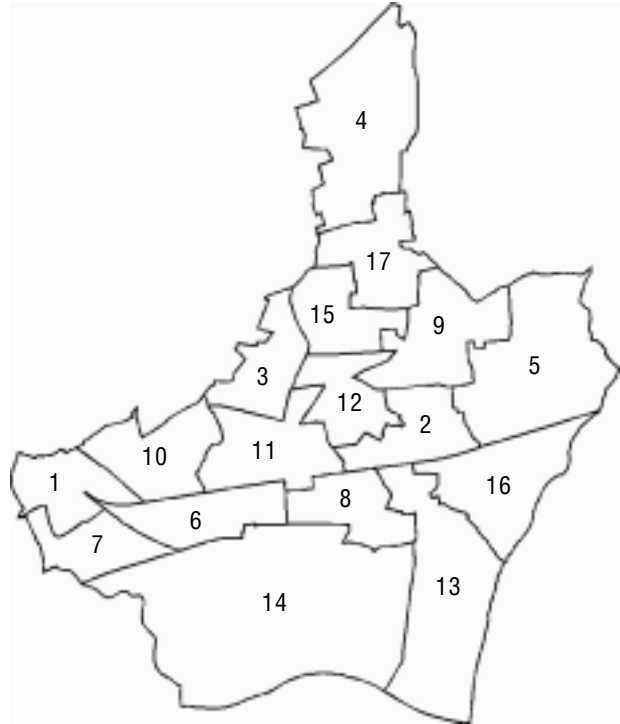

The maps relating to the 1994 and 1998 elections use the boundary as at 1 April 1996 and there are thus minor discrepancies in the 1994 map for boroughs which had been subject to changes in 1995 and 1996. The 2002 ward map shows the new wards that came into effect on 2 May 2002.

Detailed notes are also provided at the head of individual sections.

Ward voting statistics

Notes

The number voting is the number of ballot papers from all sources, included in the count.

The polling station and postal ballot papers are those included in the count.

The categories of reason for rejecting ballot papers are:

- lacking the official mark,
- containing more votes than the number of seats being contested,
- the voter could be identified by writing or marks, and
- unmarked or 'wholly void for uncertainty'.

* Voting by postal ballot only in Hackney. A large number (2,400) ballot papers were rejected because of invalid or missing declarations of identity. Had these been included in the count the overall poll would have been 31.9%. However, in all other authorities, postal votes with missing or invalid declarations are excluded from the count. A further 900 papers were collected by Royal Mail postmarked 2 to 8 May. If these had been received by close of poll the turnout would have increased again to 32.6%.

* Votes were cast at Newham polling stations using electronic touch screens. There were no rejected ballot papers as only valid votes were accepted in the counting and verification process. Postal votes were also entered electronically, by staff with agents and candidates present. The number rejected during this process was not recorded. There were 906 electors who registered to vote at polling stations but did not vote in the election for councillors. If these were included in the poll, the percentage would rise to 27.6%.
